

A GREAT GEORGIA FRUIT FARM.

Encouragement for Enterprising Gardeners and Farmers.

Twenty years ago nearly everybody in Mason and Houston counties regarded Mr. S. H. Rumph as a crank upon the fruit question.

They argued that there was no demand for fruit and trees grown in the South, that the Yankee had already a monopoly upon that business. The fact that varieties could be grown here, that the growing of apples and red berries, especially, was an exploded idea and that nobody but a northern man could successfully conduct a nursery.

These and a thousand other objections were urged by every one, and it was with great difficulty that Mr. Rumph, then quite a young man, and with but a few means, could set a growing business which to day the reputation of our numerous business men, and the success of the great fruit and nursery business of the State, and particularly of the South, has established.

He has now a large and successful business, and is the largest fruit nursery in the South.

There is no fruit nursery in the South, which to day is so well known, nor is there any which can be compared to different States the coming fall.

He has, at one of the largest in the country, surrounded by fruits and flowers of every variety and species, and is visited annually by hundreds of travellers and tourists who pass this way and can stop off for a picnic.

Dress of American Diplomats Abroad.

Ever since the declaration of American independence the representatives of the Union have always been much troubled by the quality of dress.

Franklin is known to have dressed at the cost of Louis XVI. in a clothier's suit, it is now well known, says Wilkinson, that this was the best suit of clothes ever made in the best English clothier's shop for the best English clothier.

He has, at one of the largest in the country, surrounded by fruits and flowers of every variety and species, and is visited annually by hundreds of travellers and tourists who pass this way and can stop off for a picnic.

DIVIDING EQUALLY.

A Partnership Dispute That Came Near Wrecking the Business.

When the Hon. George Winship, the well-known Dakota editor, tells the following story, he always insists that he cooked the flapjacks while his companion ate as valet de chambre to the horses of the stage company which employed them.

When Colonel William Badge takes his turn at his narration he insists that Editor Winship hammed up the meal while it was his especial province to manage the singed and esculent flapjack through his little sea of grease.

There was a division of labor in the shack stage route inn kept by them based on strictly equitable principles. It had been agreed that the Judge and the Colonel should alternate each morning in performing the painful office of fire-bulldog.

There was not as serious a jolts one would think, for it was their custom to burn the fire over night, and there were always enough embers left for a respectable fire to begin with. The propane was made of logs, & there was in the shack which in thirty miles of the Red River, which were protected by a thick stand of the tall evergreen Balsam Fir and Jack Pine, a good supply of logs.

One morning when the mercury was toying with thirty-five below, "Judge" Winship stuck his head into the entrance hole and saw the entire edge of the window, and just the fire, was a glimmer, and just the fire, was a glimmer, spreading to cover the entire edge of the building. He nudged Captain Badge who replied, besides him on the pile of skins which did duty for a bed.

"Budge?" "What's up?" The Colonel was not sufficiently awake to talk plainly.

"Budge?" Then came a little elbow action, and the Colonel in a semi-somnolent state drawled out "Whoa! dreaming of a singing mule. "Budge, she's a fire again."

"Well, you needn't be so noisy about it. There is no need of forgetting that you claim to be a gentleman even if the house is afire," growled the Colonel, who was waking up ross. "You spoiled the stickiest dream I ever had with your infernal alarm. Why couldn't you have let me have it out? And say, while you bunk with centaurs, you ought just out of common decency to wear boxing gloves or something on your own. Now you let me alone. I want to sleep."

The fire was spreading to the corners, and the whole upper part of the end wall was afire.

"Say, Colonel, the fire is spreading, and it's your turn to get up. You better put her out while it's easy."

"It ain't my turn to get up, Judge."

"Yes, it is; that's the record, Colonel."

The Judge pointed to a row of W. B. W. B. W. B. in charcoal on the wall. The last letter of course was W., showing that Editor Winship had built the fire to burnning before.

"Judge I don't care for the record. You say it's my turn to kindle the fire. The fire is already lit. That lets me out. Nature is on my side."

"Colonel, I got up you erdy, and when you think I'm going to give you today you're faled, that's all I've wrong. It's your turn and you know it."

"Judge, you think you're a holy terror on the argue but I tell you that I can lay about longer than you can argue. I'm willing to build the fire, but I'm durned if I ever agreed to put out the fire. This fire is yours. You discover it. It's your up-right of discovery. Give up and take your present."

The Colonel and I of the building was about to be consumed, the tongues of flame were licking along the dry rafters.

"Colonel, that's all I can say. I can't afford to let you get away with it. I can't afford to let you get away with it."

The end of the argument was approached. The parties drew their belts into their belts and each went for the other to score. The Colonels were soon pained. The Judge was now nearly over the heads of the men. The Colonels stuck his head out to protect his face, and he was esculpt and suddenly saw the Colonels

"Well, you guys, no biggy?"

"Nary a givin' when." Both heads dashed under cover, presently lifting their heads to see the mists had risen which they were protected, and then of course had to dash out again to find the smoke which was now filling the Colonels.

"Well, you guys, no biggy?"

THE JADE APPETITE.

How Much Nature Will Bear Being Stimulated.

The question of stimulating enfeebled jaded appetites by "other people's food" brings us naturally to another cognate with it, namely, how far it is desirable to stimulate them.

That appetite which only comes with eating requires very delicate management, and though it may be beneficial and necessary to whet it judiciously, the process is very apt to lead us to overdo it, thereby inducing us to eat too much.

A hungry man sits down and begins his meal eagerly, and as soon as his hunger is appeased feels that it is so, and naturally, if he be wise, he immediately leaves off eating. But with an appetite that increases to a certain extent with every mouthful, it is more difficult for him really to know when he has had enough, and by consequence he very frequently eats more than his digestion can deal with comfortably, only finding out his mistake when it is too late.

Roundly speaking it may be generally assumed that those who take their places at table at the regular times with indifference, feeling that they do not care to eat, are not in a perfect state of health, and it may be fairly assumed that nature does not, therefore, require the same amount of nourishment as if she were in perfect working order.

She cannot point this fact out more plainly or by any more direct means; and we shall consequently be unstrung by it if we neglect her warning. Clearly, therefore, we must not over-stimulate her to elate herself. If we do we must inevitably suffer.

The question therefore arises, how far and by what means it is advisable to exert the requisite stimulation, for without care she may not exert herself at all, and as such a fair amount of nourishment which is needed to make good the waste of tissue perpetually going on in the human frame.

It is not material to what cause this initial desire to feed may arise. It may be due to a merely temporary stimulant, or it may be due to a chronically enfeebled digestion, or it may be due to the advance of years. But whatever be its cause, we must not force it beyond a very liberal point, if we would not make matters worse.

Allowing for the variations of constitution, it may be set down as a broad rule, that with the advance of years the human organism requires less and less strong nourishment; it may it relents no less, as it can only attempt to overtax its powers of demand.

Shakespeare, whose knowledge was universal, asks:

"Does not the appetite alter? A man loves the meat in his youth he cannot endure in his age," and the poet might have gone on to say, nor can he eat the same amount of it. —[London Society].

Pigs and the Weather.

Of signs I have heard it said very frequently:

"When swine carry sticks
The clouds will play tricks."

*but that—

"When they lie in the mud
No rain of blood."

The first of these couplets is of two-fold interest. I have watched swine for years to see what proportion the number of swine and human beings have been, and have found that there has been a regular increase in the number of swine, at least with me.

The second couplet is of interest in so far as it is a prediction of the weather. The prediction is that if the swine carry sticks in their tails, then there will be a change in the weather.

The first couplet is of two-fold interest. I have watched swine for years to see what proportion the number of swine and human beings have been, and have found that there has been a regular increase in the number of swine, at least with me.

The second couplet is of interest in so far as it is a prediction of the weather. The prediction is that if the swine carry sticks in their tails, then there will be a change in the weather.

An interesting paper on local weather foretold by Mr. Amos W. Butler before the American Association for the Advancement of Science, during the Philadelphia meeting of 1884, the author having the version in full.

"When hawks gather up and send down their flight, expect cold weather. This is wholly at variance with what I have observed, for my experience has been that hawks gather during the bad weather, and that would naturally be the case with New Jersey, as the local weather generally is not so bad there as I have given it.

As in the other couplet, it is evident that the hawks are not gathered on the ground, but are flying in the air. The prediction is that if the hawks gather in the air, then there will be a change in the weather.

The First Printed Poster.

It is interesting to learn there is good evidence that the first printed poster was from the press of Faust & Schaeffer, the immediate successors of Gutenberg.

When Count Adolphus of Nassau attacked Montza a competitor for the archduke pie of that city, Diether von Isenburg, his rival in possession, being compelled to retire, affixed a declaration of his rights to the portion of the palace and upon the church.

This printed document, which was styled "The Declaration of the Elector Diether against Adolphus, Count of Nassau," bears date 1462, and being unquestionably from the press of Faust & Schaeffer is probably the earliest printed poster.

It is printed only on one side.

Selling the Novel to Her Years.

A fashionably dressed lady, who had seen younger years entered a public library the other day, and approaching the chief librarian said:

"I want something to read and don't know exactly how to describe the kind of book that would suit me."

"I guess we will be able to suit you," was the reply: "something lively, eh?"

"Yes—something, you know, that—er—well, that wouldn't be exactly suitable for a young girl."

"Mary," cried the chief to an assistant, "French novel for a woman of 35."

He Beat the Mud.

About four miles out of Birmingham, Ala., we came across a stretch of road about four miles long which was a foot deep with red clay mud. We had to ride our horses along the edge of it, and then it was a job to pull through.

On the far side, about fifty feet from the soft road-bed, we came upon a colored man with his mule and cart, the latter loaded with wood and stuck fast in the mud.

The man was seated by the roadside, while the old mule was chewing away at a heap of brush and grass which had been cast before him.

"Stand by" asked one of the party as we drew near.

"Beckon me," was the reply.

"How long you been here?"

"Since yesterday."

"Why don't you unload and get out?"

"Too much trouble, boss. I'm starved for town, an' won't pay to go back home again."

"But what will you do?"

"Wait for the mud to dry up, sah. I'sakin' mighty fast under this hot sun, an' two days more will let me free."

Just at evening of the second day we saw him come into town with the load, the mule being plastered clear to the tips of his ears.

The man recognized us, and bowing very low he said:

"You's got to hev a leetle patience down in dis yero country, boss; especilly when de mule am ober twenty yars ole." —[Detroit Free Press].

A Striking Resemblance.

Wife: "Can you tell me, my dear, why a widower is like a young baby?"

Husband: "H—m—er—because—because—"

Wife: "The first six months he cries a great deal, the second six months he begins to take notice, and he always experiences great difficulty in getting safely through his second summer."

OF LOCAL INTEREST,

Two freight rates on wool from Fort Benton to Boston is $2.10.

Fresh every day, strawberries at Claxton's.

The street crossing is being laid between Martin Bros' and J. S. Clark's store.

Call at Richardson & Kerr's and leave your order for a light summer suit.

Bain Brothers' new buck has arrived. It is built in the latest style, is very handsome and would be a credit to any city.

Wicker and reed chairs, rockers, cradles and baby carriages at Shattock's, 30.

The Bow river was so high this morning that it was found necessary to discontinue running the ferry.

At the Windsor—G. H. Johnston, J. L. Johnston, Sheep Creek; J. Horne, Toronto; F. McNab, Kingston.

Richardson & Kerr have just received another shipment of light Scotch tweeds.

J. S. Douglas received a consignment of cyclamens this morning. They are variegated and painless.

Shattock has just received a fine lot of wicker and reed furniture. See it, 30.

J. G. Baker & Co received today a large shipment of fall goods, consisting of gray flannels. These are nothing like running the season.

Richardson & Kerr have the finest range of black and colored worsteds in town.

Nearly a carload of fresh fruits and vegetables arrived from the coast yesterday for local dealers. Calgary is fortunate in being so well supplied with tropical delicacies.

Large, fresh strawberries at Claxton's Star Bakery.

The Hot Springs Record, published at Banff, has made its appearance. Wm. Findlay & Co. are the proprietors. The people of the Park should be happy now.

OWING to the heavy wind from the north the firemen took longer over their trial last evening than was originally expected. The air currents in the hall interfered with the lighting of the fire and it was over 13 minutes before steam was got up.
